

True Interview Stories from a Recent Client

- Last week I attended a job interview, first round long list and received both, yes both of the following
 - a phone call from one interview panel member , "you're through to the final round"
 - and a letter from another: "I know you will find this disappointing. I regret to inform you that your application will not be taken forward."

- But this story is just the latest piece for my collection, which also consists of
 - a negotiation for a job which lasted longer than the job
 - a rejection letter which prompted me to call and got me the job I thought I'd just been rejected for
 - a letter telling me I wouldn't be called for interview after I'd been for interview
 - a selection panel including the incumbent and someone who - I discovered later from the accounts - had ceased to be with the organisation a month before she interviewed me
 - a supplier on an interview panel with a blatant financial interest in the outcome
